No one knew of his death until yesterday morning. was then discovered by the maid, who entered to make up the fire, sitting at a table fully dressed, with an open book before him turned downward on the table. He had evidently been reading there the evening before, when a sudden attack of heart weakness killed him before he could rise from his The last seen of him alive was when the maid went to the room on an errand about 10:30 o clock the evening before. He was then in apparent good health. Dr. G. M. Hammond, of No. 58 West Forty-fifth-st. was summoned yesterday morning as soon as it was seen that something was wrong, and he pronounced Mr. Livingston The nearest relative to Mr. Livingston is his sister, Miss Julia Livingston, who is now the only surviving member of his immediate family. Seminole, No. 202 Boulevard. She has not yet been told of the death of her brother, because her condition renders it unsafe, and she will not be inferrined of it until strong enough to bear the news. Mr. Livingston was the grandson of Margaret Livingston, whose riches were the foundation of the wealth of the Livingston family. She owned many acres of land in this city, some of which is near West Broadway, but the most of which is on the East Side, near Clinton and Delancey sts. This greatly increased in value as time went on She divided the property among her children when she died and it is now split up into many portions, possessed by her various descendants. Mr. Livingston was the direct descendant of Chancellor Livingston, One of his aunts, Angelica Livingston, married Alexander Hamilton, the grandson of the Revolutionary statesman. Three of his uncles are Robert J. Livingston. Mortimer Livingston and Robert J. Maturin. He was also a relative of Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerty.

Mr. Livingston was born in Hyde Park in 1820. In his younger days he was a great lover of sports, and drove some fast horses. He had recently been living a somewhat retired life on account of lil health. He was not a society or club maa, and lived in the family home, in Thirty-ninth-st. Oyster Bay, Long Island, Dec. 15.-Governor-elect Roosevelt had a quiet day to-day, and improved it in working away at his message. A new typewriter arrived this morning, and it is supposed he has been busy receiving dictation from the Colonei of material to go into the message. There were no visitors on the first train, and the only one on the moon train was President Seth Low of Columbia University. He went directly to the Colone's house, spending several hours there in talking over matters with the (lovernor-elect. Neither of them later would say what was discussed. President Low said he had made the visit by appointment, and did not feel at Liberty to speak of the subjects considered. He returned to the city on the 2.27

ROBERTS WOULDN'T TAKE IT. THE CONTROLLER WILL NOT BE SUPERINTEN-DENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Albany, Dec. 15 (Special).-James A. Roberts, the State Controller, said to-day that the report that he had accepted the office of Superintendent of Public Works at the hands of Governor-elect Roosevelt was "without foundation." It can also be stated authoritatively that Mr. Roberts has made such business engagements that it would be impossible for him to accept the post of Superintendent of Public Works, honorable as it is, and attractive as it would be at this time to a man of his tempera-

The term of office of Mr. Roberts as State Controller will expire on December 31. He will then return to his home, in Buffalo, and engage once more in the extensive business affairs from which he was taken much to his surprise, in 1833, having been nominated for Controller without his knowledge and elected when he thought defeat was in evitable. There is great regret felt in Albany that Mr. Roberts is not in a situation to accept the place of Superintendent of Public Works, for it is generally believed that he would fill it admirably.

EXPIRED IN HIS ROOM ON WEDNESDAY DOINGS AND PROSPECTS OF THE UNI-VERSITY DISCUSSED.

> CHANCELLOR MACCRACKEN, JOSEPH H. CHOATE. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW AND OTHERS MAKE STIRRING ADDRESSES.

More than one hundred graduates were present last evening at Sherry's at the annual dinner of the Alumni of New-York University. William S. Opdyke presided over the "feast of reason and flow of soul" that followed the gastronomic enjoyments. On his right sat Chancellor Henry M. MacCracken, while among others who made up the distinguished company were Joseph H. Choate, who was present to represent Harvard; Hamilton W. Mabie, Dr. Joseph D. Bryant, Dr. John P. Munn, the Rev. Dr F. S. Schenck, Professor Addison Ballard, Professor Frank H. Stoddard, Smith E. Lane, ex-Judge George M. Van Hoesen, Justice Charles H. Truax, ex-Judge Meyer S. Isaacs, Dr. Henry G. Piffard.

E. H. Litchfield, Dr. Charles S. Benedict, William J. Hoe and C. Alfred Bill. In opening the oratorical ball Mr. Opdyke spoke of expansion, thereby meaning the expansion of the sense and applauded loudly. The presiding offic then went on to mention the great loss sustained in the last year by the association in the loss of its secretary, Cephas Brainerd, fr. He finished by introducing Chancellor MacCracken. The Chancellor took a look forward to the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the University, which will take place in 1965, and said that to make that anniversary properly celebrated there should be completed before then the library building, the liquidation of all obligations and the doubling of the endowment for applied science. New-York University now had fifteen thousand graduates upon her rolls. The Chancellor touched upon the part of the University in the recent war with Spain. He referred to the presence there last evening of several members of the Naval Reserve who had served on the Yankee, and to the fact that two of the University's sons who went to the war now filled the graves of soldiers. They are Canniff, '97, and Crosby, '93. The University now had 1,717 regularly matriculated students, and $500,000 would in three months put the University out of debt, excepting for the sum owed upon the Washington Square Building.

Joseph H. Choate got an exceedingly hearty reception when he arose to speak for Harvard. "Harward claims no superiority," he said, "but only to be the oldest of the many sisters in this country that are striving to ennoble the National spirit and to counteract the spirit of materialism that seems at times to be sweeping over us. Who ever knew any city to be bursting its bands with the strength and the velocity with which New-York is doing it to-day? If the University that bears her name drew recruits only from her boundaries and sent out graduates only within her boundaries, it would have a great place to fill in the city, in the State and in the Nation. "It would be hard to find any college which, in a short career like hers, has contributed to the community so many useful and eminent men as has New-York University. The names of some of these I have been recalling with the aid of your president. There was Joseph Taylor Johnston. Who has done more for the elevation of good taste and artistic feeling in this growing metropolis than he? Then, too, there was Dr. Howard Croshy, a shining example of character and honor and public spirit, and there were Francis Bangs, whom I well remember as a most formidable antagonist at the bar, and Judge Sedgwick, the noble judge, who twenty-five years gave his services, for I look on any judge who fills the bench honorably as giving his services to the community and to the State, and who was taken away all too soon. And there, too, is William Alien Butler, who has held out a noble example for the last fifty years. He ranks high in the list of eminent lawyers of New-York, and he is well styled, as my friend Mr. Mable says, the founder of the French realistic school since he made such a tremendous reputation Nothing to Wear. (Laughter.) Then there Lyman Abbott; long may he live to continue his chosen work! While for science what did not Dr. Henry Draper accomplish, and Richard Grant White and his great work for literature in his edition of Shakespeare? With this great list in mind what may not be expected of New-York University with its new endowment, its magnificent outldings and its growing sources so steadily invited by your distinguished chanceflor?

SOMETHING ABOUT HARVARD.

"Now, I want to say something about Harvard. On the athletic field, where we have so long sat in the mud waiting for victory, a ray of light has at that there existed in some quarters a helief that Harvard had a spirit of aloofness, but he wanted to say that in the minds of those who knew best there was no doubt that her spirit was truly National and intensely American.

"Do you recall," said Mr. Choate, "that when the war broke out, and there was a murmur within her own walls of discouragement to the young men who wished to rally to the support of the country's flag, what President Eliot said? It was in sub-stance that when the country was actually engaged in war, and called for her sons to raily to her support, it was not for them to scrutinize too closely the causes that had led to the war, but to answer her call and support the Nation so long as it was at war with any foe.

Theirs not to make reply. Theirs not to reason why. Theirs but to do and die, ike the noble six hundred." Mr. Choate went on to say that if we were to have a great Navy to defend our commerce we ought to have a great commerce to defend, and also ought to have a great commerce to acteau, and to defend the equal privileges which we hope and expect to have in China with other commercial Powers. Mr. Choate proceeded to regret the fact that so much of our export material was carried under other flags than our own, and expressed the hope that Congress would take measures to rectify this serious error, so that the American flag might be seen on every sea over American cargoes.

Mr. Choate did not share the feeling that there would never again in this country be such a wide field for effort as had existed in the last fifty years. I feel," he said, "that we may look out with a lotty hope and a high courage that our sons and our sons sons have even a nobler work to do than has fallen to the people of our generation.

Hamilton W. Mabir responded to the toast "What Makes the College". He called attention to the fact that many little Western colleges were trying to do the work there that had been done in the East so many years ago by institutions that are great and famous now, but that had once been small and weak. They were fostering the spirit of enlightenment that was to overcome the spirit of commercialism. Education must be distinguished from culture. It was not the trustees or the faculties or the buildings that made the colleges, but what Burke would have called the organic life of the institution.

MR. DEPEW TALKS FOR YALE.

Chauncey M. Depew came into the dining-room while Mr. Mable was speaking. When he was introduced to talk for Yale he was greeted with "Three cheers for the successor of Edward Mur-"Three cheers for the successor of Edward Murphy, ir., in the United States Senate." Mr. Depew said he was sorry he was late. He had no doubt Mr. Choate had been making remarks about a recent event. But, anyhow, Yale had a philosophy in losing. Yale believed that a continued series of success on one side and defeat on the other would lead to tandue discouragement. Consequently she viewed with serenity the infantile joy with which Harvard halled her victors. He knew that even Brother Choate had been seen after the game embracing every girl who carried a crimson flag. Mr. Depew set his hearers into a roar by his definition of modern diplomacy. He said it meant that the liar had disappeared. Just at present, he said, he had been studying the material. If he went to the Senate, he added with a smile, he should probably have a chance to study the sentimental mental.
Dr. Joseph D. Bryant followed Mr. Depew, sponding to the tust, "University Extension in Field of Medicine."

the Carolinas during the closing year of the Civil Before the end of the war he was app lieutenant-colonel, but was never mustered in. Having entered the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, in the fall of 1865, he vas admitted to practice in the courts of Ohlo and in the Federal District and Circuit courts in Cincinnati in 1866. A law partnership with James

Irvine, under the firm name of Irvine & Brice, im mediately followed, and Lima then became his

He withdrew from the active practice of the law about 1880, thenceforth devoting himself to the affairs of various enterprises with which he had become identified. Among these were the New-Erie and Western Railroad, the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad, the Ohio Central Railroad, the Richmond and Danville Railroad, the Richmond and West Point Terminal, the Virginia and Georgia Railroad, the South Shore and Atlantic Railroad and the Knoxville and Ohio Railroad, the National Telegraph Company, the Southern Trust Company, Chase National Bank, of this city, and the United States Express Company.

A connection formed a few years after his ad-mission to the bar with the legal department of the old Lake Eric and Louisville Railroad may perhaps be regarded as marking a turning-point in Mr. Brice's career. In time he acquired a pecunithe subject of railroading as few men have ever done. The Lake Shore road, having refused to make satisfactory arrangements for taking care of the traffic turned over to it by the Brice road, which had now become the Lake Eric and West-ern, Mr. Brice and his associates conceived and carried out the bold plan of paralleling that line of road from Buffalo to Chicago. This new line, when completed, was known as the "Nickel Plate" road, a name given it in jest by Mr. Brice, and was a great competitor of the Lake Shore road for traffic between Buffalo and Chicago and intermediate points. In order to overcome this competition the Lake Shore people were compelled to, and did, purchase the Nickel Plate of Mr. Brice and his associates. The consummation of this gigantic transaction opened the eyes of the Eastern railroad magnates to this rising young Western man, and may be said to be the dividing line between his being a comparatively poor man and his later career ments.

The success of Mr. Brice in revivifying old railroad properties which had become practically worthless because of had management is attributable almost solely to his superior skill and manipulation in handling them. He succeeded others before him had falled. Starting with rall-road properties in Ohio, into which he infused new life and energy, his field of usefulness soon broadened, and many corporations in various parts of the country eagerly sought and obtained his services, until the Brice-Thomas Syndicate, in which his chief associate was General Samuel Thomas, of this city, and through which in the main his operations were conducted, came to be known as of the leading concerns of the world for the han-Brice's latest raffroad venture was in connection which, coming down from the pineries of Michigan ties in Ohio. In December, 1894, he was elected president of the company, continuing in that office up to the time of his death. At present the trains of that road come into Cincinnati over the tracks of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton road, but it was among Mr. Brice's plans to form combining with it certain roads in Northern Michigan, a trunk line from Duluth to Cincinnati and in time to extend the system to New-Orleans. Besides his railroad properties. Senator Brice was interested in various financial and commercial cor-porations. At the time of his death he was president and a director of the Lake Erle and Western Railroad Company, president and a director of the Cincinnati, Jackson and Mackinaw Railway Company, first vice-president and a director of the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic Railway Company, president and a director of the Sault Ste. Marie Bridge Company, and a director of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the Chase National Bank, of this city; the Homer Lee Bank Note Company, the United States Guarantee Company, the Welsbach Commercial Company, the Elkhorn Valley Coal Land Company and the Western Union Beef Company. An enterprise which claimed much of his attention during the last few months of his life was the American-Chinese Development Company, which recently secured a concession for the the mud waiting for victory, a ray of light has at last fallen upon the crest of our champions. We have been severely tried, but the punishment was all for the good."

Mr. Choate went on to say that he was aware that there existed in some quarters a helief that cate the line of this railway, which is expected to open up one of the richest mineral and tea pro ducing regions of China. The Development company represents what is popularly known as the Brice syndicate, of which ex-Senator Brice was chairman, among his associates being the Rockefellers, ex-Vice-President Morton and the Central Trust Company interests.

Mr. Brice was always a Democrat, and had been prominent in his party since 1876, when he was a Presidential Elector on the Tilden ticket in Ohlo. In 1884 he held a similar place on the Cleveland ticket. In 1888 he was a delegate-at-large to the National Convention, and liberally contributed not only by his efforts, but also from his purse, to the cause of his party in the campaign of that year. It was natural, therefore, that upon the death of William H. Barnum, in 1889, Mr. Brice should have been promoted to the vacant chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee, and should have been chosen to succeed Henry B. Payne in the United States Senate upon the expiration of the latter's term, in March, 1801. In the Senate he soon attained a prominent place, although he seldom took part in the debates. It was largely in consequence of his harmonizing labors that the Democrats in the LHIId Congress were led to agree on a Tariff bill. Ex-Senator Brice was often consulted in matters affecting river and lake trans-portation, seacoast trade and railroads. In 1893-'95 he was chairman of the Senate Committee on Pacific Rallroads.
